It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

PREFACE

To the Alumni of the University of Illinois. Greeting:

It is now seven years since I sent to you a word of greeting with the first edition of the Alumni Record.

Our family, which was large then, has been increased by nearly fifty per cent. Students, faculties, and alumni have multiplied in much the same proportion. We have all worked together most cordially to advance the interests of Alma Mater, and, thanks to the liberality of the people of the commonwealth, we have seen the work prospering under our hands.

It is now perfectly evident, if it never was before, that Illinois is destined to be one of the great universities of the world. If we and our successors perform our duty as we should, here will be a great center of moral and spiritual, as well as intellectual force. We may ultimately hope to rank in the time to come with the greatest institutions of Europe and older America as a center of light and life to our own day and generation.

For this we may properly enough be devoutly thankful. It means personally a great deal to each of us that our Alma Mater, which only a few years ago was like a grain of mustard seed, the smallest among its kind, has grown into a great tree, under the shade of whose branches the youth of all nations are coming to find refreshment for their souls and strength to serve the present age, wherever in the world their lot may be cast.

But the privilege of this joy and pleasure in the growth and influence of Alma Mater, which by its reflex effect contributes also to our own growth and influence, is matched by an obligation which rests upon us all alike to do whatever we can to assist this cherishing mother of ours, to bring forth young men and women who will be of real value to the commonwealth and the nation and the world.

A university which is not producing capable graduates, filled with a consuming desire to be of service to their fellow men, may well be considered a menace rather than a benefit to the community.

The University of Illinois may indeed prove a curse to the commonwealth if its graduates are merely mediocre or if they use their trained skill merely to help themselves in exploiting their fellow citizens instead of doing everything they possibly can to assist the latter to the highest realization of their best selves.

Stated in broad terms, the real object of university education is to furnish a suitable preparation for efficient social service. If it fails to do this it is not only futile but dangerous.

We are earnestly striving to bring this fact home to the consciousness and the conscience of our student and instructing body.

In this fundamental work of making the University of the utmost service to the state and the world, the alumni can be of the greatest possible aid and that in many ways.

First of all, by taking thought you may help improve the quality of the student body in the University. You can do this by keeping your eyes steadily open for the really promising boys and girls among your acquaintances and in your community and calling their attention to the University of Illinois as a desirable place for their college and university work. If the intellectually sluggish or morally weak or spiritually blind students in any of our great universities could be replaced by those of spiritual insight, moral strength, and keen intellectuality, the nation would have great cause to rejoice. A university will benefit the community very directly in proportion to the number of really capable leaders it turns out; if these leaders be also animated by high moral ideals and aims. Send us then the best young people you can find in all the extent of your acquaintance and your neighborhood.

Second, take a really lively interest in the important features of university life. Stand by the trustees and faculties in their efforts to raise the standards of moral, intellectual, and spiritual efficiency in the student body.

It looks sometimes to a superficial observer as if the alumni, the most of them at any rate, who show any interest at all in university affairs, were interested in these things only as a means of winning intercollegiate contests and writing the University, as they say, "upon the athletic map."

Athletics, in my opinion, should form an important element in student life in general and in that of every individual student. Intercollegiate athletics, if we can control them properly, are of very great value. But after all, they are, or should be, viewed and cultivated only as a means to an end.

Our alumni should line up solidly on the Illinois platform, which is very simple, namely; that honest, straightforward athletics, participated in by all students and pursued in strict subordination to the great purposes for which a university exists, are desirable and should be encouraged. But all excess in these matters should be discouraged.

In general, the alumni should use their influence to help the faculty in insisting that the so-called student activities, athletics, social affairs, college papers,—all good in their way if kept within bounds—shall not interfere with the one great student activity par excellence, namely study; and with the one object of a university course, namely, the development of the student by study and exercise to a high grade of efficiency, physical, moral, and intellectual—an end which is often defeated—by the dissipation of energy and will power which so many students indulge in.

Alumni members of the sororities and fraternities can be in this way of especial assistance through the natural influence they can exert over their young associates.

Third, keep your Alma Mater in mind when you are able to give money yourselves, or when you know men and women of wealth who are looking for good places to invest money so as to bring in the highest return to society. The people of the commonwealth will be much more willing to grant funds if they find that the alumni of the University are willing to contribute of their means, also to magnify and improve Alma Mater.

Moreover, there are many things necessary or helpful to a great university for which the state will not as yet contribute money; or at least not in sufficient sums, and these include many of the most important and finest sides of university organization and equipment.

You can help the University of Illinois to take its place among the really great institutions by giving yourselves, or getting others to give, or both, for these fundamental interests which are especially likely to suffer in all state universities, owing to the lack of appreciation on the part of the average man of their real importance.

Fourth, keep your Alma Mater always in mind in another way. Talk about her to your friends and neighbors. Write about her and her work to the newspapers. If you hear slurring remarks concerning her, re-act at once and find out the real cause of such remarks. If they are based on fair grounds, if the criticism is just, let the University know what it is, so that we may mend our ways if they be bad. If injurious articles appear in the newspaper, reply to them or give us a chance to reply to them. Let no reflection on your Alma Mater pass unrebuked any more than you would one on your physical mother.

You, the alumni, can create and maintain in your localities a favorable atmosphere in which the University of Illinois will flourish and rise to ever new heights of service and beauty.

Fifth, give us here at the University the benefit, orally or in writing, of your continued suggestions as to how we may make the University of ever greater use to this commonwealth and the nation. I have received some most valuable aid in the form of letters of suggestion and counsel from our alumni. Send them on. They will all be considered, and as far as possible heeded.

Sixth, visit the University in person as often as you can. Come up to commencement and to the homecoming, and whenever else you can find it possible. Help us make this place a holy one for the human spirit, consecrated to all the forces which magnify the human soul, which sharpen the intellect, increase knowledge and skill, refine the taste, fire the heart and strengthen the will, clarify and exalt the ideals of love and service to our fellow men. Let us make this a place to which coming generations will look with the same appreciative and admiring gaze as the thoughtful of the whole world now look to Oxford and Cambridge, Berlin and Paris, Harvard and Yale—when we shall be counted among the greatest of all because we have ministered the most.

Fraternally,

EDMUND J. JAMES.

HISTORICAL SKETCH

OF THE

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

The very germ from which the University of Illinois has developed may, perhaps, be found in the clause of the famous ordinance of 1787, "Religion, morality and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged." From this germ has sprung abundant growth, yet in itself it is but the formulation of a general principle. It says that a certain thing shall be done, but it does not answer the questions as to how or by whom it shall be done, or when, except that it shall be done forever.

The first slight awakening to activity of this educational germ in Illinois occurred in 1804, when Congress made three districts in the Indiana Territory and directed the Secretary of the Treasury to locate one township of land in each district for the use of a seminary of learning. At this time Illinois belonged to the Indiana Territory. Later, in 1818, when Illinois became a state, a second township was given for the endowment of a seminary, and also one-sixth of 3% of the net proceeds of government lands sold after January 1, 1819.¹ This latter donation to the state was to be "exclusively bestowed upon a college or university."

The people of Illinois, however, made no attempt to establish an institution of learning with these funds as a foundation until 1833. In that year they introduced a bill to incorporate an institution to be named the "Illinois University." The bill met with strong opposition, as Springfield was named for the location. Through jealousy, Vandalia stirred up the opposition of other neighboring cities; friends of the infant colleges of McKendree, Shurtleff, and Illinois looked with alarm upon the establishment of such a state-endowed university; and, in addition, the men in control of state affairs, in order to avoid taxation, had already used all moneys received for the college fund and from the sale of the seminary lands for the current expenses of the government. And any proposition to cut off the use, in a similar way, of further receipts from the same sources was decidedly unpopular. Besides they would have had to resort to taxation in order to restore the trust funds already misappropriated. Fortunately perhaps for them, the bill met with defeat, and for several years after this the efforts made to establish a state institution of higher learning were wholly unorganized. The people took little interest in the matter and attempts were even made from time to time to divide up the college and seminary funds among the colleges of the state.²

Again, in 1851, the senate passed "An Act to Establish a State University," but upon re-consideration the bill was laid upon the table. An examination of this bill shows that the proposed university was to be a board of men to distribute the income of the college and seminary funds to the several colleges of the state, upon conditions named, for the purpose of educating teachers for the common schools.

After this failure, however, a movement started to establish an institution of a rather different character. The Buel Institute, an agricultural society of Putnam County, at its fair in September, determined to hold a farmers' convention at Granville in November "to take into consideration such measures as might be deemed expedient to further the interests of the agricultural community, and particularly to take steps toward the establishment of an agricultural university." Professor Jonathan Baldwin Turner of Jacksonville was invited to be present and address the convention. The attitude of the leaders of this convention toward higher education and what they sought to obtain through their proposed university may be shown by quoting the resolutions presented by a committee, of which Professor Turner was chairman.

"RESOLVED, That we greatly rejoice in the degree of perfection to which our various institutions for the education of our brethren engaged in professional, scientific, and literary pursuits, have already attained, and in the mental and moral elevation which those institutions have given them, and in their consequent preparation and capacity for the great duties in the spheres of life in which they are engaged; and that we will aid, in all ways consistent, for the still greater perfections of such institutions.

"RESOLVED, That, as the representatives of the industrial classes, including all cultivators of the soil, artisans, mechanics, and merchants, we desire the same privileges and advantages for ourselves, our fellows, and our posterity in each of the several callings as our professional brethren enjoy in theirs; and we admit that it is our own fault that we do not also enjoy them.

"RESOLVED, That, in our opinion, the institutions originally and primarily designed to meet the wants of the professional classes, as such, cannot, in the nature of things, meet ours, no more than the institutions we desire to establish for ourselves could meet theirs. Therefore,

"RESOLVED, That we take immediate measures for the establishment of a university in the State of Illinois expressly to meet those felt wants of each and all the industrial classes of our State; that we recommend the foundation of High Schools, Lyceums, Institutes, etc., in each of our counties, on similar principles, so soon as they may find it practicable so to do.

"RESOLVED, That, in our opinion, such institutions can never impede, but must greatly promote, the best interests of all those existing institutions."

The prominence which this convention holds may be attributed largely to the bold and vigorous way in which Professor Turner discussed the questions, "What do the industrial classes want" and "How can that want be supplied." His answer to the first question was, "They want, and they ought to have, the same facilities for understanding the true philosophy—the science and the art of their several pursuits, their life business—and of efficiently applying existing knowledge thereto and widening its domain, which the professional classes have long enjoyed in their pursuits." Replying to the second question, his belief was that the want neither could, nor should, be supplied by existing institutions which were designed to educate the professional classes, and whose spirit was literary and intellectual as distinguished from the industrial and practical. He said the need was for a "university for the industrial classes in each of the states" and presented his "plan for the state university."

This plan was quite elaborate. It was insisted upon that such a university would, of right, receive the college or university fund which the state held from the general government, and it was doubtless intended to claim also the seminary fund, though this is not stated distinctly.

The address greatly aroused the convention, a report of which, including the address in full, was published and widely circulated. The Report of the Illinois State Board of Agriculture and the United States Patent office report of 1851 reproduced it; the New York Tribune and the New York Horticulturist noticed it with approval; the attention of the National Agricultural Association was called to it; the Philadelphia North American gave it editorial approval; etc., etc.¹ Acceding to the request of the convention, the Governor, in summoning an extra session of the legislature to meet June 7, 1852, laid before that body the subject of industrial education as presented at the Granville meeting.

At a second convention, held at Springfield, June 8, 1852, representatives and friends of some of the colleges attended and claimed that their institutions, rather than the proposed new university, legitimately should receive the college fund. They made a bid for the seminary fund, agreeing to establish teachers' departments if it were bestowed upon them. A discussion, sharp and angry, took place and the quarrel was transferred to the legislature. The convention presented its land grant memorial and enlarged the plan for a university by adding a normal school, to be co-ordinate with the industrial department,² in order to meet the demand that the seminary fund be used in training teachers for the common schools. The convention also urged in its memorial that a beginning be made at once to carry into effect either the original plan or some modification of it which the General Assembly might think preferable, "and if possible, on a sufficiently extensive scale to honorably justify a successful appeal to congress in conjunction with eminent citizens and statesmen in other states, who have expressed their readiness to co-operate with us for an appropriation of public lands in each state in the Union for the appropriate endowment of universities for the liberal education of the industrial classes in their several pursuits in each state in the Union."

In the legislature, the House referred the whole subject to its committee on education, and the college men won at first by securing from it a bill to divide both funds among the existing colleges. But the result was a drawn battle; for the bill was laid upon the table, and as if to be rid of a troublesome contest, both Houses joined in a resolution asking authority from Congress to add both the college and seminary funds to the common school fund, so that the income from them might be forever given to the support of the public schools.

A third convention was held in Chicago in November, 1852, at which the Industrial League of the State of Illinois, with Professor Turner for chief director, was organized,—the purpose being to promote the interests of the industrial classes. This convention published an address to the people of the state, prepared a memorial to the legislature, and arranged for petitions both to the legislature and to Congress.

At a fourth convention held in Springfield, January 4, 1853, again the request for an industrial university was set forth and the legislature was urged to memorialize Congress, asking for each state an appropriation of public lands, of a value not less than $500,000 for the liberal endowment of an industrial university.

In 1854 Governor Matteson proposed the subject of industrial education to the legislature for consideration at its special session. In the following January, 1855, the Industrial League held a fifth convention in Springfield and a bill was introduced in the legislature for "An Act to Incorporate the Trustees of the Illinois University." The trustees were to locate the university and to receive from the state the college and seminary funds for its endowment, on condition that they raised a like amount from other sources. They were also to receive any grants which Congress might make for industrial education. The plan of the proposed institution was broad and liberal as it appears in the bill, which did not, however, obtain any definite action from either House.

There was little apparent sympathy in Congress with this subject, which was arousing such widespread interest, perhaps due to the fact that in 1854 President Pierce had vetoed a bill proposing land grants to the states for establishing asylums for the indigent insane, and in this veto had used language which showed clearly that his action would be the same toward a bill providing land grants to the states for colleges of agriculture and science.

With the coming of a new president in 1857, friends of industrial education again bestirred themselves, and their measure was House Bill No. 2 introduced by Justin S. Morrill of Vermont, a man from one of the older states which had not thus far benefited by the land grant of the federal government. It met with strong opposition, and the bill was finally defeated at the hands of President Buchanan who interposed his veto, largely upon constitutional grounds,¹ and it was considered useless to seek for further action by Congress while Buchanan was president. The bill provided for a grant to the several states of 20,000 acres for each member of Congress from the state, according to the apportionment to be made after the census of 1860. The states were to establish within five years not less than one college, where the leading object should be to teach agriculture and the mechanic arts, without the exclusion of other scientific and classical studies.

Again early in December, 1861, Mr. Morrill renewed the agitation in favor of a national grant of land to each state in the Union for the promotion of education in agriculture and the mechanic arts, and secured the passage of the so-called Morrill bill by both houses. It was approved by President Lincoln July 2, 1862. The act was substantially the same as the previous bill. The chief differences were a grant of 30,000 acres of land for each member of Congress instead of 20,000; the exclusion of states in rebellion; and the requirements that the states accept within two years instead of five, and that instruction be given in military science. The grant was to constitute a perpetual fund, the income of which was to be "inviolably appropriated" by the state "to the endowment, support, and maintenance of, at least, one college, where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the legislatures of the states may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life."

The results of this movement may reasonably be looked upon with satisfaction and pride, and great honor is surely due to Professor Turner. In a study by President James entitled "The Origin of the Land Grant Act of 1862" may be found conclusive evidence that to "Jonathan B. Turner, the Illinois professor and farmer, belongs the credit of having first formulated clearly the plan of a national grant of land to each state in the Union for the promotion of education in agriculture and mechanic arts, and of having inaugurated the agitation that made possible the passage of the so-called Morrill Act. To his memory should be raised a monument in each of the sixty-eight institutions which have grown out of his effort or whose power and usefulness have been increased by these appropriations."

It is well within the rules of propriety that Illinoisans congratulate themselves that the movement so full of good to the nation, to labor, and to youth everywhere, had its inception here in Illinois; that from Illinois came the demand upon the federal government; that to an Illinois senator is due the first movement in its favor in Congress; and that an Illinois president gave it life by affixing his signature.

On February 14, 1863, the legislature formally accepted the provisions made by Congress and in due time the land scrip for the 480,000 acres, to which Illinois was entitled, was sent to the governor.

But even after the passage of the bill there was much controversy over the funds thus made available for educational purposes. Some wished to divide the fund among several agricultural colleges; while others preferred one college and favored having it made a part of an already existing institution. Questions of this nature caused much bitter strife. Those who had struggled for the passage of this bill had sought to establish one institution and to make it unlike the existing colleges of the state, and entirely separate from them. Naturally, they deprecated any attempt to divide the fund or to use it in establishing departments in existing colleges. The views of this party were embodied in a bill, drafted by a committee of which, Jonathan B. Turner was chairman, and substantially similar to the charter finally granted in 1867. Resolutions were adopted by the State Agricultural and the State Horticultural Societies insisting upon one institution, and opposing an effort to divide the fund, or to use it in establishing departments in existing colleges. They proposed that the location should be made, after the consideration of bids, at that place which seemed to offer the greatest facilities.

The General Assembly of 1867 passed a bill giving any county, city, township, or incorporated town, power to vote bonds and to make proposals for securing the location of the University. The people of Champaign were early alert to the idea of securing the institution and put forth every effort to obtain the prize; nor were the opposing counties by any means idle. In their efforts to defeat this county, the latter sent out warnings and appeals through circulars and newspaper articles to the people of the state, in which ridicule and derision of the claims of Champaign County formed the burden. The seminary property, a large brick building which formed a part of the offer of Champaign County, received the label "The Champaign Elephant," and this epithet was well kept before the people of the state; certain Chicago papers lending ready and nimble hands in the propagation of this and other like derogatory attacks. Champaign County, on the other hand, lost no opportunity to gain influence and to make friends for its cause. After a not altogether creditable contest among the several competing counties—Champaign, Logan, McLean, and Morgan—the legislature accepted the offer of Champaign County, and, subject to certain conditions, located the University at Urbana.

Governor Oglesby approved the act incorporating the Illinois Industrial University February 28th, 1867. This act provided that five trustees were to be appointed from each of the three grand judicial districts of the state, and one trustee from each of the thirteen congressional districts, who with the governor, superintendent of public instruction, president of the State Agricultural Society, and the Regent, when elected, as ex officio members, should constitute the Board of Trustees. In pursuance of the law, the Board met for the first time in the Representatives Hall in Springfield on March 12th, 1867. Governor Oglesby, the temporary president of the Board, prescribed the oath to each member, according to the constitution of 1848, then in force. This oath, among other things, solemnly pledged each man not to engage in dueling during his term of office, and declared that each had not been guilty of dueling since the adoption of that constitution.

Under the law, the first business to be transacted was the election of the Regent, or President, of the University. The Board chose Reverend John Milton Gregory, a man of the broadest and most enlightened views, who at that time was President of Kalamazoo College, Michigan.

The Regent being elected, the trustees drew for their terms of office, as the act provided that one-third should serve for a term of two years, one-third for a term of four years, and one-third for a term of six years.¹ At this first meeting the Board also passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That sensible of our dependence on the Divine blessing in the great work in which we are engaged it should be a standing order of this Board to commence each day's proceedings by the Word of God and prayer." The motion carried unanimously.²

The new Board of Trustees, including Regent Gregory, was largely chosen from the laity and clergy of the Baptist church, and for some time fear was entertained that the new university would become largely a denominational school. However, this fear was groundless, as the bias in the actions of the Board, which many looked for, did not appear, and in Dr. Gregory's long administration it would be difficult to point out anything in his action tending in that direction.

His acceptance of the position as Regent of the University did not occur until after he had made a trip to Chicago and to Champaign. He says that in both these places only one opinion was expressed to him, and that was, that this new institution was to be "the grandest university on the American continent." He accepted the election and became the first Regent, of what was then the Illinois Industrial University, serving as its executive head from March 12, 1867, a year before the institution was formally opened, until 1880.

John Milton Gregory was born at Sand Lake, New York, July 6, 1822. He was a graduate of Union College, and a pupil of Eliphalet Nott, one of the greatest educators of his day. He studied law from 1836 to 1848, and later, after some time spent in the study of theology, he entered the Baptist ministry. For a time he taught in a secondary school in Michigan, and was in 1858 elected State Superintendent of Public Instruction of that state. He held this position until 1863, when he was elected to the presidency of Kalamazoo College. After serving this College four years, he entered upon the duties of Regent of the University.

Dr. Gregory was a man of high ideals and broad sympathies, and his personal influence upon the student body was marked. His vision of what an institution such as a State University should be was far reaching.¹

During the year following his election to the regency, and previous to the opening of the University, not only were the plans for the institution pushed forward at the seat of the proposed university, but Dr. Gregory also went about over the state, seeking to interest young men everywhere in securing a higher education. Many of the addresses which he made were delivered from the rear end of some farmer's wagon at a county fair. To many young men who afterwards came to the University and who have since been of great value to their state, the appeal came from the lips of this college president on some such occasion.²

One of the first great tasks of Dr. Gregory was to prepare an outline of the general aims of the new university, and a course of study. This he did, as chairman of a committee appointed by the Board. The following departments and courses of study were suggested to be developed as soon as practicable.

6. The course in History and Social Science
7. The course in Philosophy, Intellectual and Moral¹

The report of this course of study committee caused considerable excitement among the people. The idea of teaching "English Literature" and "Ancient and Modern Languages and Literatures," proved as the red flag to the infuriated bull of the story. The institution was denounced as no more than one of the "old colleges" and the question was derisively asked, "Why add, by a public grant of lands, to these old institutions, of which the people already have too many?" It is probably due to the warfare aroused by this course of study that only 77 were enrolled at the opening of the University on March 2, 1868, and of these, 45 were from Champaign County. Untrue and sensational tales were told and believed, greatly to the discredit of the new University. Many demanded that the classics should be excluded from the course of study; others that they should be tolerated, but not cherished. By some it was claimed that the students of belle-lettres would constitute an aristocratic class in the institution; that the students of agriculture and mechanic arts would be looked upon as inferiors. The dissatisfaction showed itself in newspaper articles and in public addresses; dissensions took place in the Board of Trustees; and finally, in 1870, a convention of delegates from the several county agricultural societies met at Bloomington to consider the past, present, and future condition of the Illinois Industrial University. Dr. Gregory attended this convention and delivered an address. He explained at length the act creating the University and the course of study, answered some reasonable questions, and as a result very much improved the existing feeling. They appointed a committee to visit and investigate the institution and report thereon. This committee's report served greatly to strengthen the University.

The subjects actually taught at its opening were algebra, geometry, natural philosophy, history, rhetoric, and Latin, and the work was carried on in the brick building which was the donation of Champaign County. This building also served partly as a dormitory and came to be known as the Old Dormitory building.

Owing to the belief that it is the separation of the theoretical and practical which renders so much education mere "book learning," the Board of Trustees decided that a manual labor system should be thoroughly tried, and all students, not excused for physical disability, were required to labor from one to three hours a day. The students went out in squads, under their military officers, and under the general supervision of members of the faculty. The maximum compensation of such labor was eight cents an hour. Many students worked voluntarily over hours, and received for such over-work twelve and a half cents an hour. In a short time, however, labor was made wholly voluntary, except as it was a part of some course of study, as the shop practice in the course of mechanical science and art.

In matters of discipline Dr. Gregory believed in treating the students as men, and in appealing to their manhood for the maintenance of good order. His love of freedom showed itself in the establishment of the Students' Government system, first tried in 1870. By permission of the faculty, the general assembly of the students was organized, and a constitution adopted providing for the election of a president, vice-president, secretary, and marshal. There was also a senate of 21 members and a court, consisting of a chief justice and two associate judges. Under this constitution, the senate enacted laws, which became valid only when approved by the Regent of the University. All offenses against these laws were tried before the students' court, and punished by fines according to the claims of offence. Cases requiring the severer penalties of suspension or expulsion from the University were referred to the faculty, and students refusing to pay the finer imposed by the students' government were suspended from University privileges. For a time this system of government worked admirably, but later politics crept in and perverted justice, and the system was abandoned in 1883.

The faculty for the first term consisted of four instructors, including the Regent, two assistants, a head farmer, and two non-resident lecturers.¹ A decided contrast in numbers with our faculty of to-day! The two towns likewise presented a very different appearance. Street pavements were laid some twenty years later than this; the buildings, for the most part, were of the cheaper grade of scantling frames; and the streets themselves were more often adorned by wood piles than by sidewalks. Stock of all kinds ran at large in both towns and in the country, so that all houses were securely fenced to keep out the predatory town cows and hogs.

Women were not at first admitted to the University. In 1869 the question of their admission was raised, and after a lengthy discussion, upon the motion of Mr. John S. Johnson,² it was settled in the affirmative in March, 1870. The story is told that a group of boys, much interested in the outcome of the discussion, listened to the deliberations of the trustees through a friendly stove-pipe hole, and when the vote was finally taken, and announced as favorable to the young women, an approving shout was heard from the gallant fellows above.³ Girls ever since have been thus kindly received, and their presence has come to be viewed as a matter of course. In the first year, twenty-two were registered; while during the year 1911-12, their attendance had increased to 1,007, out of the total number of 5,200, or nearly one-fifth of the whole enrollment of the University of Illinois. Thus their early kindly reception seems to have been appreciated.

In spite of the prominence of agriculture in the state and the important part which the farmers took in the industrial movement, the agricultural department languished. The proportion of agricultural students during the first decade was insignificant.

Meanwhile the engineering courses developed rapidly. Stillman W. Robinson, elected to the professorship of Mechanical Engineering in 1869, may be regarded as the real founder of the College of Engineering. He appreciated the educational possibilities of shop work and made it a part of the engineering instruction. In January, 1870, a mechanical shop was fitted up with tools and machinery. Dr. Peabody, in speaking of it, says, "It is probable that tool or machine instruction was first given in America at the Worcester Free Institute, which was formally inaugurated in November, 1868, six months after the inauguration of this University. I have not been able to find that Professor Robinson's practice shop had any other predecessor in this country." In the summer of 1871 the mechanical building and drill hall (burned on June 9, 1909) were erected and equipped for students' shop work in both wood and iron, and for military drill.

The legislature, in its session the same year, authorized the construction of the main University building, according to plans and estimates laid before it, at a cost of $150,000. They appropriated $75,000, and provided that the $75,000 additional should be appropriated at the next meeting. Work on the building was commenced, but the legislature failed to make the expected additional appropriation. A broad, white streak on the west wall remains the indelible record of the time when the work could go no further. It was deemed advisable to provide temporarily for the continuance of the work by the sale of the Champaign County bonds. This was done, and the work was resumed. Every effort was made that this money should be repaid by the State, but such efforts were unavailing. The building was finished and dedicated December 10, 1873.⁴

The other of the larger buildings erected during this period was the Chemical Laboratory, which was authorized by the legislature of 1877 and dedicated at the commencement in 1878. Its cost, when fitted and furnished, was $40,000. There were other smaller appropriations made during the period, which were used in the construction of a house and barn on the horticultural grounds, a gardener's house, a greenhouse, and a barn for the agricultural department.

A re-organization of the Board of Trustees occurred in 1873. The number of members was reduced from 31 to 11—the Governor and the President of the State Board of Agriculture, ex officio, and nine others, who were still appointed by the Governor.¹ Beginning at this time also, the President of the Board was chosen by the members from among their own number for a term of one year. At the meeting held July 10, 1873, Emory Cobb was elected the new president. He gave much time and attention to the affairs of the University for more than a quarter of a century.

At the end of the first five years the organization of the University consisted of four colleges—the College of Agriculture, of Engineering, of Natural Science, and of Literature and Science. These were sub-divided as follows:

The College of Agriculture embraced the Schools of Agriculture and Horticulture.

The College of Engineering included the four Schools of Mechanical, Civil, and Mining Engineering and Architecture.

The College of Natural Science included the School of Chemistry and the School of Natural History.

The College of Literature and Arts and Science embraced the School of Modern Language and Literature and the School of Ancient Language and Literature.

Besides these, there were the Schools of Commercial Science, the School of Military Science, and a School of Domestic Economy. The instruction in the last named school began with the college year 1872-'73. The full course in the beginning very nearly corresponded with that in the School of English and Modern Language, except that in the second and third years lectures on topics of domestic economy took the place of the mathematical studies. This was the first School of Domestic Economy of high grade, and with a complete course, organized in the United States, if not the first in the world.

Admission requirements were at first slight in all departments; but fewer than half the students of the earlier years were able to meet them, and members of the faculty found themselves overloaded with elementary work to the detriment of the higher instruction. In accordance with Dr. Gregory's views, the entrance requirements were gradually advanced, and in 1875 a preparatory year was instituted which later developed into the Academy. Candidates in the preparatory classes had to be fifteen years of age and be able to pass satisfactory examinations in arithmetic, geography, English grammar, and United States history. Like other institutions of the Middle West, Illinois, after some experiments, adopted the "accredited school" system. The first school so accredited was the Princeton High School, and by 1880 the number had increased to twenty-two.²

In the early days of the institution, the elective system predominated. Although liberty had its risks, it was "not thought useful or right to attempt to urge every student, without regard to his capacity, tastes, or practical wants, to take some lengthened curriculum." But gradually this system of complete freedom was modified, and students who desired to "graduate," were required to complete some one of the courses outlined in the catalog. The introduction of academic degrees at the commencement in 1878 strengthened this tendency. Distinct courses were then defined, to each of which a degree was given.

According to the original state law, the usual diplomas and degrees could not be given by the University; certificates showing the studies pursued and the attainments in each were given instead. But this was a new dispensation which the great world was unwilling to accept. The graduates found their paper not current in the market. The name of the institution was persistently misinterpreted. The Regent had to be at all times prepared to show that he was not only a trustee of the people but also their servant. While it is a matter of record that when the earlier professors went to the State Teachers' Association and sought admission to the college section, it was denied them because an institution that gave no degrees had no rightful claim to call itself a college.¹

In 1877 the alumni petitioned the legislature to give the University authority to grant degrees. The authority was given, and a fee of $5.00 ruled to be charged for each diploma conferring a degree.² Graduation with a certificate was still permitted to those who had obtained the requisite number of term credits, but not in subjects prescribed for any particular degree.

The social life during this period was, in the main, simple and democratic. A number of student organizations were formed, many of which are still in existence. The earliest literary societies were the Adelpheic and Philomathean organized in March, 1869. Two years later the women of the University organized the Alethenai. In the same year, 1871, the University band furnished its first music for commencement. The first student publication was made in November, 1871, and was known as The Student and published monthly. The paper two years later changed its name to The Illini. The Young Men's Christian organization dates back to February, 1873; also the organization of the Agricultural Society to the same year. In 1874, there was organized an association for the advancement of telegraphy, known as the Illinois Industrial University Telegraphic Association. Instruments on the line numbered twenty-five, and the central offices were open for practice all hours of the day.

Not only were societies formed in this early period which still exist, many of them, but also a number of instructors were appointed who are still in the service of the University. The Vice President, Thomas Jonathan Burrill, came to the University on the 20th of April, 1868, as a special assistant, to relieve Regent Gregory of certain algebra classes, and has held many and varied positions of trust since that date. In the fall of 1868 Professor Samuel Walker Shattuck came to the University as Assistant Professor of Mathematics and Instructor in Military Tactics. Three years later, he became Professor of Mathematics and continued to serve the University in this department to Sept. 1, 1912. He has also filled various other positions. He was Professor of Civil Engineering for the year 1869-70; he was Acting President for six months in 1873; and served as the first Vice President from 1889 to 1894. He became the financial manager in 1873. A high sense of honor and true loyalty in service have been embodied in his career, and the University very appropriately showed its appreciation of him by conferring upon him in June, 1912, the highest honor it can bestow, the degree of LL.D.

No sketch of the University would be complete without the mention of Edward Snyder, who was appointed at the same November meeting in 1868 as Professor Shattuck. His primary interest was in modern languages, but the exigencies of the time compelled him to teach a great variety of subjects as remote as bookkeeping and military tactics. He was a most sympathetic adviser and friend of the students. He continually gave or lent them money; and in 1899, three years after his retirement from active service, he gave to the University $12,000, to be loaned to needy students. He died in 1903.

Professor Nathan Clifford Ricker began his work as Instructor in Architecture in the University in March, 1873. He has twice acted as Dean of the College of Engineering. Many of the University buildings have been constructed after plans drawn by him. Professor Ira Osborn Baker came to the University as Assistant in Civil Engineering and Physics in September, 1874, after having graduated the spring before. Thus four of the present faculty have been connected with the institution approximately forty years.

The period of Dr. Gregory's administration is not marked as one of great prosperity financially. The University was the owner of 480,000 acres of land scrip. The Board of Trustees proposed at first to locate 50,000 acres of its land scrip, and to sell the rest; but the pressure for funds was so great that it located but 25,000 acres, about 9,000 being in the state of Nebraska and 16,000 in the state of Minnesota. The large amount of land scrip thrown upon the market by this and other land grant universities had greatly depreciated its value,¹ and the 455,000 acres sold brought but $319-178.87, or seventy cents an acre.

As fast as the cash was received it was invested in such securities as the law demanded, and the rate of interest then current in the state, eight to ten per cent, yielded from $25,000 to $30,000 per annum, for the payment of current expenses of instruction. The money panic of 1873 did not seriously affect the finances of the University until about 1877, when debtors began to refund their loans at lower rates of interest. In this way, the income of the University was largely diminished. During the year 1878 the expenditures were found to be $3,500 in excess of the income. No surplus funds were on hand, no prospect of increasing the interest on the endowment fund—something had to be done—so it seemed best to reduce somewhat the salaries of the teaching force. Dr. Gregory suggested that the reduction should begin with him, not because his salary was the largest, but rather because he would prefer to see his own pay reduced 20 or 25 per cent than that the already too meager compensation of his associates should be lessened. A reduction was made of the $3,500 by taking small amounts from the various salaries and departments, and at the request of the Regent $400 from his salary. Places which became vacant were left so; certain departments were cut off—those of mining, commerce, and domestic economy; the fees of students were raised; and economy in its most rigid form had to be practiced everywhere.

Meanwhile the internal condition of affairs was gloomy. The cordial agreement which had existed between the students and the Regent and faculty became strained, and finally open rebellion occurred.

Under these discouraging circumstances Dr. Gregory submitted his resignation at the June commencement, 1880, and it was immediately accepted by the Board. He spent the remainder of his life in Washington, D. C., where he died October 20, 1898. On Sunday, the 23d of October of that year, a memorial convocation was held in the old University Chapel, and his body was laid to rest in the ground just west of the main University building. In speaking of him in a resolution, the alumni of the University, gathered in Chicago, expressed themselves as follows:

"Full of years and honor, like a shock of ripened corn in an abundant year, our beloved instructor and friend, Dr. John M. Gregory, the founder and first Regent (President) of our Alma Mater, has been gathered to his fathers."

Dr. Gregory served the University for thirteen long and hard years, at a time when wisdom, foresight, promptness, courage—all the characteristics of a competent leader—were in most urgent demand, and in none of these respects was he found wanting.

Upon his resignation the Board appointed Dr. Selim Hobart Peabody, formerly Professor of Physics and Mechanical Engineering, Regent pro tempore. Dr. Peabody was born at Rockingham, Vermont, August 20, 1829.

He spent one year in the Public Latin School of Boston, but owing to his father's death, circumstances compelled him to leave school and help earn a livelihood for himself and others. After working five years he entered the University of Vermont at the age of nineteen and graduated in 1852. The next two years were spent, first as principal of the Burlington, Vt., high school, and then as teacher in the Collegiate Institute at Fairfax, Vt. In 1854 he became Professor of Mathematics and Physics in the Polytechnic College of Philadelphia; three years later he accepted the position of Chief Clerk in the United States land office at Eau Claire, Wisconsin; in 1859 he took charge of the city schools at Fond du Lac, and in 1862 he became superintendent of schools of Racine, in the same state. Three years later he became an instructor in the City high school of Chicago. While here he also organized and directed the evening high school. On March 11, 1868—Inauguration Day—he was offered the professorship of mechanical science and engineering in the Illinois Industrial University. This he declined, but in 1871 he went to the Massachusetts Agricultural College at Amherst as Professor of Physics and Civil Engineering, where he remained three years, and then returned to his old position in Chicago. In 1877 he received the degree of doctor of philosophy from the University of Vermont. On the 10th of October, 1878, he accepted the appointment of Professor of Mechanical Engineering and Physics in the Illinois Industrial University. He served in this capacity until the close of March, 1880, when he resigned to accept the work of editor-in-chief of what later became the International Cyclopaedia. On July 27th, of this year, he was reappointed to the same professorship and made Regent pro tempore, assuming the new duties on August 15th. The following March, 1881, he was elected Regent of the University and continued as such until he presented his resignation June 10, 1891.¹

Almost all of his adult life, at the time of his election to the regency, had been spent in teaching and accompanying activities. It is said that at the time of his appointment he could have taught successfully any subject offered in the curriculum of the institution.

Dr. Peabody encountered numerous annoyances and difficulties during his régime. In the beginning, many of the students assumed a questioning attitude toward the new Regent. The seniors were said to have held a meeting to determine whether they would return or not, but kindly consented to give the new man a trial.² The first serious hitch came from a clash between certain secret fraternities and the court of the organized students' government. As a result, the Regent recommended, and the trustees approved, a ruling that no student could enter the University until he had pledged himself not to join a fraternity, and that no student should be graduated until he had certified that he had not belonged to any fraternity while in the University. The adoption of these rules disclosed the existence of four such organizations. Their members petitioned the faculty to repeal the rules, but the faculty only turned their petitions over to the Board, which recommended that their requests be refused. The rule was strenuous, and was not repealed until the September board meeting, 1891.³ From the time of the passage of the rule, more or less antagonism existed, directed chiefly toward the Regent, whose duty it was to execute the mandate. Unfortunately for him, he was a man sufficiently sensitive to criticism to find it discomforting.

Another occurrence, trivial in itself, also inflicted no little injury. One of the cadet captains in the military organization failed to receive an examination grade sufficient to permit him to continue in his official position. His brother officers undertook to compel his re-instatement by entering upon what we would call a strike. Dissatisfied students were allowed to take their grievances to the Board of Trustees, and it in turn sat as a sort of high court, and in effect, put the faculty upon trial. In this case, a matter which should have been adjusted without great difficulty, became unnecessarily burdensome.

President Peabody systematized administrative affairs, instituted improved bookkeeping and gathered up loose ends everywhere. He personally attended to numerous details. Dr. T. J. Burrill, in writing of his work, said that "throughout his administration he had no stenographer. The University did not own during his time a typewriting machine. The official correspondence was mainly conducted in his own handwriting. There was no registrar. At the beginning of each term he personally issued class permits and at the close recorded class grades. Aside from his headship in the department of Mechanical Engineering and Physics, he taught classes (during different terms) in Mechanics and Hydraulics and Mental Science, the latter subject being required of all seniors. It is little wonder that there was not much time for effective campaigning outside or for dreaming of future greatness."

But in spite of many obstacles, and in spite of the fact that these were days of small things educationally, progress was made during this administration. In 1879-80 there were 434 students (reduced in 1880-81 to 379), and 26 teachers of all grades, of whom 15 were of professorial rank; in 1890-91, there were 519 students and 40 instructors, 24 of whom were of professorial rank. Thus there was a gain in students of 19.6 per cent and in the corps of instruction of 53.9 per cent, and for those having professorial rank, 60 per cent. For the first named year the total income from all sources was about $60,650; for the last named, $124,600, or 146 per cent gain. The total legislative appropriation for the session of 1879 was $25,500; that for the session of 1891 was $147,200. This latter figure included $70,000 for the Natural History Building, but excluding this, the gain was $51,700, or 203 per cent.¹

Before President Peabody's administration, all state appropriations had been clearly for specified purposes and exclusive of salaries for instruction. At the legislative session of 1881, the trustees resolved to ask, in addition to the usual sums, for an appropriation for the current expenses of instruction. The legislature granted the sum of $11,400 to help cover the amount of the loss suffered by the University because of the reduction in the interest on its investments.² The next legislature was asked for $14,000, for the same purpose, and the grant was made. During the biennial periods which followed, the sums of $24,000, $32,000,³ and $40,000 were allowed, respectively.

Appropriations for buildings were small, and were slow in coming. After much persuasion and political wire pulling on the part of the Regent and his local aids, $10,000 was secured for a Drill Hall in 1889. This caused great rejoicing. During the year the students purchased and placed in the Drill Hall $125 worth of gymnastic apparatus, the money being for the most part the proceeds of an athletic entertainment given the year before in Champaign. Those who at that time wished to practice in the gymnasium paid 50 cts. a term for a ticket, and with the money so secured, instructors were employed from among the students. At the next General Assembly, Regent Peabody, almost unaided by others connected with the University, succeeded in winning sufficiently the good will of the legislators to cause the passage of a bill carrying $70,000 for a new Natural History building.

In 1887, a law was passed making membership in the Board of Trustees elective, at a general state election, and restoring the Superintendent of Public Instruction as an ex officio member, and so there are to-day three ex officio and nine elective members. The change in the manner of election helped materially to bring the institution before the people of the state. It also made it possible for women to serve on the Board. None became members, however, until November, 1904, when Mrs. Lucy L. Flower was elected. It is interesting to note that she received many times the number of votes that have been cast for any other woman as a candidate for office in this state.¹ While she was the first woman regularly elected a member of the Board. Mrs. Dr. Julia Holmes Smith really served a short time before her, having been appointed by the Governor to fill an unexpired term.

In 1884 the opportunity seemed favorable to begin the sale of the 9,000 acres of land located in Nebraska, and by judicious management the endowment fund was thus raised from about $320,000 to upwards of $450,000.² The sale of this land stretched out over a period of twenty-five years, the last being sold only in 1909. The sale of the land in Minnesota began at a somewhat later date, and while all is now sold (1912), the payments are not yet quite all made. The total endowment fund received by the University up to March 1, 1912, from the sale of its land scrip amounted to $647,401.53. The pressing need for funds and the dislike for paying taxes upon this land caused much of it to be sold at a very low price.

In 1887 the federal government again took up the work it had begun in 1862. By the passage of the Hatch Act, approved March 12, of that year, the national government appropriated $15,000 per annum to each state for the purpose of establishing and maintaining, in connection with the colleges founded upon congressional act of 1862, agricultural experiment stations "to aid in acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful and practical information on subjects connected with agriculture, and to promote scientific investigation and experiment respecting the principles and applications of agricultural science." President Peabody took a prominent part in the discussions of the convention which led to the passage of this act. Under its provision, the Agricultural Experiment Station of Illinois was founded in 1888 and placed under the direction of the trustees of the University, and a part of the University farm, with buildings, was assigned for its use. State appropriations have been added to the federal grants to the Station, until its revenues have become the largest of those of similar institutions throughout the world.³

In 1890, by another measure known as the Morrill College Aid Act, the Congress of the United States made further appropriations for the land grant colleges. Under this enactment each such college or university received the first year $15,000, the second $16,000, and thereafter was to receive $1,000 a year additional to the amount of the preceding year, until the amount reached $25,000, which sum was to be paid yearly thereafter. The use of this fund, although restricted, made possible indirectly a considerable development in the humanities as well as in the natural sciences.⁴

As the institution developed, the name the "Illinois Industrial University" was felt to be a serious handicap. It was never understood in the sense originally intended. The promoters had meant to establish an institution in which a liberal education should be offered, and one which should be particularly suited to those engaged in industrial pursuits, in distinction to the professions as they were then recognized. But the prevailing impression gained for the name was that manual labor was a prominent feature. The name came to be considered a serious obstacle to the institution, and a bill was introduced in the legislature of 1885 for its change. The application for a change of name met with bitter opposition, especially in the senate, many of the opponents contending that the change would be detrimental to the "industrial" ideas of the early advocates. But on June 19, 1885, Governor Oglesby approved the bill which changed the name to the "University of Illinois."

In this same year the State Laboratory of Natural History was transferred to the University from Normal. This laboratory was created for the purpose of making a natural history survey of the state and publishing the results, and also for the purpose of furnishing specimens to the public schools and to the state museums. These collections amounted to 75,000 specimens, in round numbers, besides 15,000 bottles, vials, and other packages, the contents of which were largely unclassified. The apparatus transferred with this material consisted chiefly of a very full outfit of collecting apparatus for both terrestrial and aquatic work and a considerable amount of microscopic materials and apparatus.

During the régime of Dr. Peabody, the University largely extended the knowledge of itself among the people of the state principally by means of addresses and exhibits. It has been estimated that during the one year of 1888 over 100 gatherings were attended by members of the faculty and more than 200 addresses were delivered. The most notable of the technical exhibitions were kept on display, as follows: six months at the State House in Springfield, sixteen months at the expositions at New Orleans; at the great educational displays at Madison, Wisconsin, and Chicago; and at the state fairs.¹

Many things conspired to make Dr. Peabody's office a hard one to administer. Matters of discipline, disturbances in the cadet battalion, a radical change in the personnel of the Board, all these were circumstances which so strengthened the opposition to the Regent as to defeat his re-election in 1891 for the next biennial period. In June he offered his resignation, which was at once accepted. That he succeeded as well as he did is evidence of great personal and professional power among men and of exalted devotion to the cause he espoused.

Upon his resignation the Board temporarily appointed a man who has made his life a part of the University and who through the varying fortunes of the institution has filled many important and critical gaps. That man was Dr. Thomas Jonathan Burrill. He first came to the University as a special assistant to teach algebra, on the agreement that as soon as botany could be provided for, he should have charge of it. Three months after his first connection with the institution, T. J. Burrill became Assistant Professor of Natural History, which at that time included botany. He became full Professor of Botany and Horticulture in 1871. His professorship began at "sun up" and lasted indefinitely and included anything that needed doing. He taught most of the day, planted with his own hands, or saw to the planting of most of the trees on the campus (after he had laid it out for treatment), wrote reports, lectured here and there, served on innumerable committees, collected specimens up and down the state, and was even charged at one time by the Board with the sale of a pair of mules, whose labors on the South Farm showed that they were not so able to stand the strenuous life as he was. After the founding of the Agricultural Experiment Station in 1888, Professor Burrill became its horticulturist.

In 1875 Dr. Burrill became the corresponding secretary of the Board of Trustees, a position he held for thirteen years. In 1878, he was appointed Dean of the College of Science, and for a brief time was Acting Regent. When the Regency changed in 1880, Professor Burrill filled the place temporarily. Four years later when the head of the University was absent for a brief time on University business he was made presiding officer. Upon the resignation of Dr. Peabody in 1891, Professor Burrill began an indefinite interregnum. Almost his first undertaking was to reorganize the military department, which had caused a great deal of trouble in preceding years. He effected such an organization that it has never caused any trouble since.

Students were allowed greater freedom and responded with greater sanity of conduct. Everywhere a better spirit grew up. The old fixed courses of study were abolished and substantially our present system evolved. In September, 1891, the Board passed the following resolution with regard to fraternities:

"Resolved, That the pledge hitherto required for candidates for entry to the University in regard to college fraternities be omitted, and that the subject of these fraternities be referred to the committee on rules."

During Dr. Burrill's administration the attendance rapidly increased. Student organizations were stimulated—we find the first University Glee Club organized in October, 1891; the first annual concert of the Illinois Military Band given in February, 1892; besides the organization of the Mandolin Club, Chemistry Club, Art Club, Students' Assembly for "Social and Intellectual Purposes," etc.

But perhaps the point of greatest triumph in his administration was in the finances. The Board had been accustomed to asking support for the University in a most modest way, and the result was that it had been doled out to them in fifty-cent pieces. Dr. Burrill advocated asking for everything wanted, leaving the legislature to cut down the request if it saw fit. From the appeal to the legislature in 1893 came the appropriation for the engineering building, and greatly increased sums for other expenses. The total appropriation rose from $147,000 to $295,000.¹

Several new courses of study had their origin in this period. The School of Philosophy and Pedagogy, included in the College of Literature and Arts, was organized, as well as the Graduate School. The department of Municipal and Sanitary Engineering and Architectural Engineering were likewise created. In January, 1893, the agricultural short course was offered. The office of Registrar was provided for August 16th of the same year, and the appointment of W. L. Pillsbury was made. In 1894 an appropriation of $1,800 was made for a biological station at Havana and $1,200 for a summer school at the University. The first summer session began the following June and continued four weeks; thirty-eight persons were enrolled, twenty-six of whom were teachers from over the state. Members of the regular faculty gave the instruction and the full resources of the University, in the way of laboratories, libraries, and apparatus were made available for the work.

Although the preparatory class served as an important feeder for the University it was not the intention of the governing boards that this class should be largely increased. In March, 1894, however, the Board established a two years' course in the preparatory school. Preparatory classes had been taught almost from the beginning of the institution, but with the anticipation that the time would soon come when such instruction might be wholly left to the high schools. If it had seemed possible, the University authorities would gladly have abandoned the preparatory work, but if, as it appeared, it must be continued, better provision had to be made for it. Hence, a principal was appointed, teachers were employed, and a course of instruction mapped out.

While the faculty confined themselves in the main to undergraduate instruction, the graduate department was slowly taking shape. The first fellowships were instituted in 1892, and in 1894 the faculty was authorized to define the requirements for doctors' degrees.

The University gradually extended its relations with the public school system of the state through its accredited schools, and also by the aid of the county superintendents who conducted examinations for scholarships, and by its course of University extension lectures. A great change came over the state in its attitude toward the University. Dr. Burrill's policy was one of open discussion, friendly co-operation with all educational and other interests of the state, and had much to do with allaying opposition on all sides.

Forty-four years is a long time to serve an institution, and when that service has been rendered with such faithfulness, such kindly benevolence, and such utter unselfishness as in the case of Dr. Burrill, the institution should certainly honor the man. It did so at the 41st commencement by conferring upon him the highest honor that the University can give, the honorary degree of LL.D. Although Dr. Burrill retired from active duty Sept. 1, 1912, he retained his office in the Natural History Building, thus the institution is still to have the benefits of the counsel of this superior man whose visions are not, even now, of the past University, but who is still planning for the future, still buoyant, still optimistic.

Various causes delayed the action in electing a new Regent, but it was felt that the important thing was to find the right man, no matter how much time it might require, rather than to hasten the election. Great care was taken in the matter and after three years of inquiry and discussion, the Board tendered the appointment, April 13, 1894, to Andrew Sloan Draper of New York. The title of Regent as applied to the chief executive of a collegiate institution was found to be confusing since the term was generally used for a member of the board of control—a trustee. The legislative enactment founding the University designated the executive by this name and it was so used from that time up to the appointment of Dr. Draper. With his appointment the Board of Trustees gave authority for the title "President" to be used instead of the title "Regent" as given in the University charter. The time fixed for the beginning of Dr. Draper's services was August 1, 1894, and upon that date he assumed the duties of this office.

The third president of the University was of sturdy New England stock and was born June 21, 1848, at Westford, New York. He was educated for the profession of law in the Albany Law School of Union College, graduating in 1871. For nearly a dozen years after his graduation in law, he practiced his profession. He was a member of the New York state legislature in 1881, a Judge of the United States Court of Alabama Claims from 1884 to 1886, and State Superintendent of Public Instruction from 1886 to 1892. He received the honorary degree of doctor of laws from Colgate in 1889, from Columbia in 1903 and from the University of Illinois in 1905.¹ For two years previous to his coming to the University he was superintendent of the public schools of Cleveland, Ohio.

President Draper did not aspire to the presidency of the University; instead, he was sought out by the Board. He says, "I had serious misgivings about the advisability of accepting the post. I doubted my adaptability to it." The fact that he was not a university man caused him to hesitate. While for a long time he had followed educational thought, he had not had much to do with the higher grades of college and university work. But his wide experience with men, in politics and educational work, and his ability as an organizer, aided greatly in his management of University affairs.

President Draper early sided with the many friends of the University who felt that, while the institution was organized primarily to educate people for industrial vocations, it was not doing its whole duty as long as its efforts were confined within these limits. Conferences were held with the trustees and faculties as to the best means of beginning departments of law, medicine, and teaching. The result of this activity was that during his administration the University organized and established a number of new schools and departments.

The first new school was that of Pharmacy. The Chicago College of Pharmacy made a proposition to turn over and donate its school and property to the University on the provision that it be maintained as a part of the University of Illinois. The Board accepted the proposition at its April meeting, 1896,² and on May 1, this College became the School of Pharmacy.

Negotiations looking toward the affiliation of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Chicago with the University, which had been going on for several years, were concluded by the Board of Trustees March 9, 1897.³

On April 21, 1897, it became the School of Medicine of the University of Illinois. It was one of the foremost of such schools of the Middle West. Its buildings were substantially constructed and its location directly opposite the Cook County Hospital, and in the very center of opportunities for medical research, gave the students unusual clinical privileges. The first year there were 409 registered at this medical college. The institution was entirely self-supporting, and continued a part of the University of Illinois until June 30, 1912, when the renewal of the lease was refused on the part of the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

The organization of a School of Law was a matter which had long been in the minds of the authorities, and nearly two years previous to the opening of the school, the Board of Trustees had determined that the step should be taken. Pursuant to their action of Dec. 8, 1896,¹ the School of Law was organized and instruction began September 13, 1897. The formal opening was through a public meeting held in the chapel of the University, which was addressed by Justice Jacob W. Wilkin of the Supreme Court of the state. Many members of the local bar, and prominent citizens, as well as students, attended the meeting. The faculty of the School of Law was composed from the beginning of professors devoting their entire time to instruction, and of other professors who taught related subjects in the University, such as constitutional law, the history of jurisprudence, etc., and non-resident lecturers. The course of study at first covered two years, but a very short time later it was re-arranged on the three-year basis. On February 9, 1900, the School of Law became the College of Law; and on the same date the School of Medicine became the College of Medicine.²

In 1897, the School of Library Economy which had been established in 1893 at the Armour Institute of Technology in Chicago was transferred to the University; the Director of that school was appointed librarian of the University Library; and the State Library School was opened. There were but two other such schools in the country and no other west of the Allegheny Mountains. Admission to the school was placed upon the same basis as admission to other departments of the University.

From time to time some slight provision had been made for musical instruction and in 1895 the work had been reorganized and enlarged. By vote of the trustees on June 9, 1897, the department became the School of Music with a separate faculty and organization.³ Instruction was given in violin, piano, and voice, and a course was offered leading to the degree of bachelor of music.

The adequate supervision of social interests was felt to require distinct administrative attention, and at the March meeting, 1897, the Board of Trustees created a Dean of Women's department and appointed a Dean in the person of Dr. Violet D. Jayne of Minneapolis, Minnesota.⁴ Events proved the selection to be a wise one. In 1901, a similar measure was adopted with reference to male students, by the appointment of Professor Thomas Arkle Clark, Dean of Undergraduates, who served in this capacity until 1909, when he became Dean of Men.

In 1899 some additional courses were offered in railway engineering. Two years before this the Big Four Railway Company had built a dynamometer car for the use of the University upon its system, and in 1900 the Illinois Central Railroad did the same thing, and decided improvements were made upon the first car offered.

In the summer of 1899 the University made an earnest effort to establish the summer session. Some such efforts had been made years before, but without much success. It secured the attendance of 148 students during a term of nine weeks. The work was satisfactorily initiated and the results were considered quite substantial. The work offered was largely of a character which would appeal to teachers in the high schools of the state, and persons of this class responded in considerable numbers. Students were allowed to do work which might count towards a University degree, and many availed themselves of the privilege.

The work of the State Entomologist's office had been done at the University of Illinois since January, 1885. By legislative enactment in 1899 it became permanently established at the University, the trustees of which are required by that act to provide for the Entomologist and his assistants such office and laboratory rooms as may be necessary to the performance of their duties.

On March 12, 1901,¹ a School of Dentistry was organized as a department in the College of Medicine. In the following fall the school opened with an enrollment of 134 students. Some four years later the name was changed to the College of Dentistry. This college remained an integral part of the University until June 30, 1912, when it was discontinued.

The General Assembly in 1900 made an appropriation for the establishment of courses of training for business, and, in accordance with that action, the trustees approved the organization of the Courses in Business Administration (frequently given elsewhere under the name of School of Commerce). The department opened in 1902 with two new professors; one called from Yale, and the other from Tome Institute.

One year later the special appropriation by Congress to the state made possible the founding of the Engineering Experiment Station. Within its scope were embraced several problems connected with architecture, and civil, electrical, mechanical, and sanitary engineering. The quarters were in the University buildings and shops.

President Draper managed in a large degree to put the University in a more favorable light before the people of the state, who in many cases had looked upon it with disfavor or with indifference. One of the menaces of the University's power to do good was the claim often made through the secular newspapers of the state that there was little religious spirit in the University. President Draper early began placing the facts before the people to show that this was untrue. Statistics from the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations refuted these charges; greater efforts were made by the several church denominations; and near the end of his administration the percentage of men and women who were parties to the great Student Volunteer Movement for Christian Missions was shown to be greater than in any other state institution.

President Draper overcame much of the opposition which had existed in a measure between the University and other colleges of the state by showing in addresses and papers that all of these colleges and the state's big school were needed to do the work which should be done.

The increase in attendance at the University during the decade from 1894 to 1904 was marvelous. The attendance at Urbana increased from 750 in 1893-4 to 3100 in 1902-3, and during the latter year there were about 900 in the Chicago departments. The number of instructors increased proportionately. Especially striking was the growth of the College of Agriculture. In the early nineties the attendance of regularly matriculated students had almost reached the vanishing point, a result due partly to defective equipment and partly to the prevailing skepticism among the farmers themselves with regard to the possibilities of scientific instruction in agriculture. During this period new interest sprang up, the appropriations increased, and in 1903, for the first time, there came to the University a substantial number of agricultural students.

Not only were the appropriations increased for the College of Agriculture, but there was also a general increase throughout the University. For the biennium commencing July 1, 1895, the appropriation for the general current expense was $180,000, and for the following two-year periods, respectively, $220,000; $270,000; $350,000; and $500,000; making a total in ten years of $1,520,000.¹ In addition to these increased appropriations for current expenses, there were large appropriations for buildings.

The Library building, dedicated at commencement in 1897, was occupied in the September following. It was both designed and constructed by graduates of the University of Illinois. The interior decorations were by Mr. Newton A. Wells, and it is said that they present the best example of a pure Byzantine style to be found in the United States. The architects were Professors N. Clifford Ricker and James M. White. A new astronomical observatory was completed, equipped, and occupied. Under the dome a fine twelve-inch telescope was erected by the foremost telescope builders in the United States. Another important addition to the group of University buildings was the electrical engineering building located just north of Engineering Hall; and in the Central Heating Plant located to the east of the Electrical building—both designed by professors in the department of Architecture. All the University buildings are heated by the Central Heating Plant. The pipes are carried in brick tunnels a third of a mile in length and large enough to enable a person walking erectly to pass through them.

At the close of the year 1900, the main group of agricultural buildings was completed on the South Campus, from an appropriation of $150,000. This was the first time the state had expended any considerable amount of money to provide an agricultural plant.

Other buildings erected during President Draper's administration were a new wood shop on the site of the old one which had been burned, a President's house, a splendid gymnasium, an excellent building for applied mechanics, a testing laboratory, and University water station. South of the Science building a substantial and capacious chemical laboratory was constructed. The old chemical laboratory was remodeled and given over to the College of Law. The building of the College of Medicine in Chicago was largely reconstructed, and the West Division high school property was also acquired and put into excellent condition. In 1897 a new gymnasium was installed on the upper floor of the old mechanical building. It was not ideal in appearance, but was adequately equipped and well suited for practical use. It was provided with a very satisfactory equipment of lockers, and also with reasonable toilet and bathing accommodations. Illinois field was considerably enlarged and much improved in appearance. The unsightly board fence was removed and a handsome iron one put in its place. The running track was enlarged so as to be a full third of a mile in length.

The legislature of 1903 made provision for the establishment of the Woman's building, three agricultural buildings, a foundry, and a steam laboratory.²

A new greenhouse was constructed and occupied opposite the new electrical building and added an attractive feature to the University grounds. In connection with the Electrical building and the Central Heating Plant there was installed and put into operation an electrical lighting plant. It supplied arc lights upon the campus and also incandescent lights in the buildings which are wired for the purpose. It was the policy to light all the University buildings from this center as soon as possible.

Lightning struck the chemical building in August, 1896. The roof and practically the whole of the interior of the building were destroyed. Nothing remained but the four walls. Steps were at once taken to renew the roof and the interior was replaced in a very hasty, rough, and unsubstantial manner because of lack of time and funds to do the work properly. A year later, in June, 1897, the Natural History building was struck by lightning. The results were not so serious as with the chemical laboratory, but fire followed and not only the roof but also the upper portions of the interior, and the building and its contents, were seriously injured by water. The damage to the latter building was repaired in time to prevent any interruption of University work.

On June 9, 1900, the oldest building on the campus, which accommodated the wood shops, testing laboratory, hydraulic laboratory, repair shops, and gymnasium was totally destroyed by fire. The building was an old one, yet substantial and exceedingly useful, and housed important interests.

Perhaps the event which caused the most serious concern on the part of the administration was the defalcation of the Treasurer in February, 1897. All the cash balances of the several funds were involved. All the appropriations had been collected from the State Treasurer to the end of the year, and there were no means which could be applied to salaries and other expenses. Fortunately the legislature was in session and official notice was brought to the attention of that body, which came to the relief of the University by assuming charge of the whole matter and restoring the funds completely.

President Draper showed the keenest personal interest in students and student activities. The united action of the students in all important measures to be advanced, the kindly and frank treatment of each other in their personal and class relations, and the hearty and loyal support of all University interests were immense factors in the control and enlargement of the institution. The adoption of orange and blue as the University colors by the general assembly of students within a month after the beginning of the administration was a step. Encouragement was given to athletics by the employment of coaches and University instructors in the department, and they were made more popular by the President's attendance upon the games. The grounds were beautified and made attractive by making open spaces for sward, the paving of walks and drives, and the planting of a colony of squirrels upon the campus.

While President Draper stood for what furnished students social and physical enjoyment, at the same time he was a rigid disciplinarian. The enforcement of authority has been made easier down to the present time because of President Draper's successful stand in administering justice after a certain class riot, which occasioned considerable difficulty.

Dr. Draper resigned in March, 1904; his resignation to take effect after two months' leave of absence, thus practically rounding out ten years of service. They were a splendid ten years for the University of Illinois. Things were favorable when he began. The excellent opportunity for the chief executive was turned to the best account. He quickly appreciated the situation and with abundant forcefulness and admirable generalship, carried the institution forward in its remarkable career. Having been elected to the newly created office of Commissioner of Education in the state of New York, he gave up his work in Illinois with abundantly demonstrated evidences of its success during the ten years of his presidency.

On November 5, 1904, Dr. Edmund Janes James, the fourth president of the University, assumed the duties of that office. His formal installation took place in October of the following year. On this occasion delegates were present from a large number of American and foreign universities, making the exercises of unusual interest. Perhaps one of the most striking features was a series of conferences on various questions of educational policy.

President James is the first native of Illinois to be elected to the presidency of its state university. Moreover, he has served the two other great universities of the state, having presided over Northwestern for a time and having been for six years a professor in the University of Chicago. He is a descendant of pioneer Methodist ministers and was born May 24, 1855, at Jacksonville, Illinois. He prepared for college in the Model Department of the Illinois State Normal School and in the fall following his graduation there, became a student at Northwestern University. After spending one year at this institution and one year at Harvard, he entered the University of Halle in 1875, where two years later, at the age of twenty-two, he received his doctor's degree. He first taught as principal of the high school at Evanston, going from there to accept a similar position in the High School Department of the Illinois Normal University. In 1883 he became Professor of Public Administration in the University of Pennsylvania. While there he was for a time secretary of the graduate faculty and organized the instruction in this department. He was also Director of the Wharton School of Finance and Economy.

In 1896 he accepted a position as Professor of Public Administration and Director of the University Extension Division in the University of Chicago. Six years later he resigned this position to become President of Northwestern University, and in 1904 he again resigned his position in order to accept a similar one at the University of Illinois.

He received the honorary degree LL.D. from Cornell College (Iowa) in 1902, from Wesleyan, 1903, Queen's College also in 1903, and from Harvard University in 1909.

The progress of the University during the last few years has been rapid and uninterrupted. Opportunities for advanced work in nearly every department of the University have been materially increased. Perhaps the organization of the Graduate School as a separate administrative body was a step which aided most greatly along this line. The legislatures of 1907 and 1909 appropriated for the work of the school a sum of $50,000 a year. This was a step unprecedented in any state and the act was warmly welcomed by educational authorities.

Hand in hand with graduate work goes the necessity for a strong library. While not yet all that could be desired, the University library has likewise progressed. The number of volumes in 1904 was 63,724; the number of pamphlets, 14,512; while on June 30, 1912, the general University library contained 212,700 volumes, aside from about 23,000 pamphlets, pieces of sheet music, maps, and photographs.

The courses in Business Administration were established in a modest way in 1900. Five years later an effort was made to put the work on a better basis, and the legislature gave the School an annual income of $25,000, and since that time it has become one of the strongest in the country. The last legislature recognized the importance to the state of this department in the substantial way of making an appropriation for a Commerce building. On May 21, 1912, occurred the laying of the corner-stone of this building.

The department of Household Science has taken its place as, on the whole, the foremost university department of its kind. In 1910, for the first time in any university, was offered a complete four-year course in household management, as distinguished from Household Science.

The Liberal Arts colleges are making a definite effort not only for the promotion of research, but also toward the uplifting of secondary education by giving to prospective teachers opportunities for higher work and better preparation.

During the year 1905, the Trustees created a School of Education. In some respects this was a grouping together of the courses in the University which pertained most directly to the future work of the teacher. All instructors who offer courses primarily intended for prospective teachers are on the faculty of this school. In framing its organization, the presidents of the normal schools of the state were consulted, and their advice has proved most helpful on many important points.

The legislature in 1905 made the small appropriation of $5,000 for the establishment of courses in ceramics, in response to a request from the various ceramic societies of the state, who asked that the University give thorough and reliable instruction in the geology of clay working materials, their origin, classification, physical and chemical properties, and their behavior under such influences as are met with during the processes of manufacture. Courses in ceramics and ceramic engineering, supplemented by a course in cement making, were organized and have become regular four-year courses in the College of Science. It is a School which has proved itself of much benefit to the people of the state in a number of ways. It has found a method of making high grade brick and tile from material before regarded as worthless; it has shown, in the manufacture of enamel brick, that Illinois clays may be used more profitably than those of other states; it has compounded a white and cheaper grade of stoneware; and it has given to the people formulae for compounding crystalline and fritted glazes which heretofore had been kept secret.¹

In the same year the State Geological Survey and the State Water Survey became scientific departments connected with the University. The legislature created the State Geological Survey as a bureau of the University, with the objects and duties usual to such surveys. The University has furnished suitable quarters for the offices of this survey, and it has found in the laboratories of the University a most valuable assistance in the prosecution of its work. The presence in the University of men of the scientific standing of those engaged in the Survey has been of very substantial, though indirect, value to the scientific advance in these various subjects. The State Water Survey had for its purpose the study of the water supply of the state in all its aspects. Its work has been both in the field and in the laboratories.

The College of Agriculture and the Experiment Station have produced a profound influence upon the farming practice of the state in the last ten years.

The main contribution of the College of Engineering, in the same period, as distinguished from what it has done hitherto, probably lies in the stimulus given to industrial research through the Engineering Experiment Station. As the work and purposes of the Station have become better understood in the state, the officers in charge have been flooded with applications for help far beyond their ability to meet.

On January 30, 1906, the Board of Trustees created a department of Railway Engineering. One year later, supplementing that action, the School of Railway Engineering and Administration was established. This School offers courses in railway, civil, electrical, and mechanical engineering as well as in management.

A Mine Rescue Station was established at the University in 1909. It is in co-operation with the State Geological Survey and the College of Engineering of the University. Its purpose is to demonstrate to mine operators and others the value of oxygen helmets and resuscitation apparatus in connection with rescue work in mines, as an aid to fighting mine fires, and in the opening of mines which have been sealed on account of fires. The Station not only gives demonstration but also undertakes to train men in the use of such apparatus, the service being given gratuitously, and as far as possible, to all interested within the limits of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Iowa, Missouri, and western Kentucky.

Nor is the University dependent only upon these inward workings for signs of its prosperity. There are many outward signs as well. A splendid advance began in the appropriations for buildings in 1889 with that for the Natural History Hall. During President Draper's administration, this advance gathered force, until with President James we find the buildings going up, not one at a time, but by the twos and threes. The estimated value of the buildings on the campus at the beginning of this period was $1,127,500; while at the present time (1912) the estimate is $2,229,000. Among the more important ones constructed during the past ten years, is the Auditorium, costing $100,000, which has been completed and in constant use from its dedication in November, 1907. It proves a great help to University life. The Physics building has been erected with an appropriation of $250,000, and an addition built to the Natural History building from an appropriation of $150,000. Abraham Lincoln Hall has been constructed at a cost of $250,- ¹Alumni Quarterly, Vol. III, No. 3, July, 1909, Progress of the Univ. in Five Years by David Kinley.

000—the name being chosen for the building because the appropriation was obtained during the centennial year of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. The Woman's building has been erected from an appropriation of $80,000, and the University Power House from an appropriation of $75,000. Among other structures that have grown upon the campus in this period are the Mechanical Engineering Laboratory, Greenhouses, buildings for Farm Mechanics, Ceramics, and the State Entomologist.

For the biennium beginning July 1, 1903, the total amount of appropriation was $1,152,400, while for the biennium beginning July 1, 1911, the University received $3,519,300; something like $835,000 of this appropriation being for buildings and permanent improvements. Among the more important buildings to be constructed from this appropriation are the following:

Armory	$100,000
Engineering Building and Ground	200,000
School of Commerce Building	125,000
Addition to Woman's Building	125,000
Stock Judging Pavilion	80,000
Horticultural Building	50,000

Not only was this large appropriation made to the University for the present biennium, but also a bill was passed providing for a one mill tax on all the assessed property of the state for the support of the University.¹ On the present taxing basis, the law should yield about two and one-quarter millions of dollars a year. This sum is not automatically appropriated to University uses, although it can be used for no other purpose; however, only such a sum will be appropriated biennially from it as the General Assembly is convinced is needed by the institution for which it is collected. This means that the ambitious interests within the University will reach an agreement on the campus; the budget will be made here; and the united requests, within the sum available, can be presented as a unit to the legislative committee. The one mill tax puts the regular support of the University upon a safer foundation, and assures a regular income. No other event in the history of the institution is more important than the passage of this bill.

Altogether aside from the increase in attendance caused by the addition of new schools and new courses, the increased numbers at the University of Illinois is striking. For the year 1903-4, the total attendance was 3,594 (including the Academy), while for the year 1911-12, the total attendance was 5,200. By vote of the Trustees the Academy, which had existed since 1876, as a one, two, or three year preparatory school, was discontinued at the end of the school year 1911.

With the increased appropriations and the increased attendance has also come a material strengthening of the teaching force. Salaries of men of professional rank have been increased fifty per cent, and distinguished scholars have been brought to the University from all over the world.

Naturally the increased attendance has meant increased activity in all kinds of student life. Fraternities and sororities have almost doubled in number. The installation of a chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, Sigma Xi, Tau Beta Pi, and other honorary organizations is a tribute of the esteem which sister institutions in the country hold for Illinois. Interest has developed in debate and oratory and at the same time a record has been maintained in athletics of which Illinoisans may be proud. One of the most comprehensive organizations within the University perhaps is the Illinois Union. It came into existence at a mass meeting of the students on March 3, 1909. The Union is an organization of all Illinois men, whether graduate, undergraduate, or faculty, whose purpose is to develop good fellowship among the students and to promote Illinois spirit by all possible means.

One of the sources of strength to any institution is the good will and co-operation of its former students in all the work of that institution. The interest and pride of the alumni of the University of Illinois in its work seem steadily and plainly to increase. The Alumni Record made its first appearance in 1906 and contained an account of the life and work of each graduate of the institution up to that time, as well as similar accounts of the faculty and trustees. The 1912 publication is an attempt to continue the good work.

With the growth and variety of University interests, the problem of administration became more and more complicated. While in the early days matters of discipline were settled by the faculty, and if this settlement was unsatisfactory, the complainants often carried their woes to the Board of Trustees, at the present time the Council of Administration, which is made up of the President, Vice President, and the deans, has complete control of discipline. The General Faculty has given way to the University Senate consisting of the members of the Council and all full professors; although each college maintains its separate faculty, whose action in important matters requires the ratification of the Senate or the Council.

One of the strongest evidences of educational progress of any university lies in the increased estimation in which she is held by her sister institutions throughout the country. Dean Kinley, in writing of this, said, "Our admission to the Association of American Universities and the consequent recognition of our graduate work by foreign universities, expressions of opinion in the newspapers and magazines and personally by distinguished educators, are all cumulative evidence that we have advanced to a higher educational plane in the opinion of those most able to judge."

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL NOTE.

As yet no adequate history of the University of Illinois has been published. The chief sources of information for such a work may be found in the various official publications of the University, chief among which are the Reports of the Board of Trustees. These reports have been published since 1868, annually up to 1876, and biennially thereafter. In these reports may also be found historical addresses given by Regents Gregory and Peabody. The Illinois School Reports published by the Superintendent of Public Instruction contain the biennial reports of the Regent or President of the University. Its development may be traced, too, through the annual catalog, first labeled the Annual Circular, then the Catalog, and finally the Register of the University of Illinois. These volumes have very brief historical sketches which form a sort of backbone of the important events from the beginning of the University. A more complete historical sketch may be found in "Facts for Freshmen Concerning the University of Illinois" published by Dean Thomas A. Clark and Arthur Ray Warnock, in the fall of 1911. Interesting articles of an historical nature have appeared from time to time in the Alumni Quarterly, chief among which are a series entitled "Makers of the University." The Laws of the United States and State of Illinois Concerning the University of Illinois are a collection of the acts of the Federal Congress and the state legislature relating to the University of Illinois.

Some idea of the work of particular departments may be gathered through the various scientific publications—such as, the bulletins of the Engineering and Agricultural Experiment Stations. In the University Studies are contributions from various departments of the University, literary as well as scientific.

In the various student publications may be gleaned aspects of student life not brought out by the official records. Among the most important are The Daily Illini, first published monthly as The Student, but now issued six times a week during the academic year; The Illio, an annual publication of the junior class; The Illinois Magazine, a literary monthly; the Agriculturist, containing contributions from students and instructors in the College of Agriculture, and the Technograph, containing matter of similar nature for the College of Engineering, all serve to bring out the various phases of student activity.

Valuable sketches covering the earlier period are: "The University of Illinois in the 17th Biennial Report of the Superintendent of Public Instruction of Illinois," by W. L. Pillsbury; the same author's sketch of Jonathan Baldwin Turner in the Transactions of the Illinois State Historical Society; President Edmund J. James's monograph entitled "The Origin of the Land Grant Act of 1862."

ANNALS OF THE UNIVERSITY

An act donating public lands, on the ratio of 30,000 acres for each Senator and Representative, to the states and territories which would provide colleges for the benefit of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts was passed by Congress, and approved on July 2, 1862. Under this grant Illinois would receive property to the value of $600,000.00 (480,000 acres) the interest on which was to be applied for these purposes. The grant had to be accepted and applied to its uses before July, 1867, or it would have reverted to the government.

1863

The Legislature of Illinois accepted the grant Feb. 14, 1863, and discussed the matter for some time without being able to come to any agreement on the details of the proposed college or on its location. Some wished to divide the money up among the existing colleges, provided they established schools of this nature; some to establish a school to teach Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts; and some to attach a new school to the Normal University.

At the State Fair held in Decatur in 1864, a committee was appointed by the State Agricultural Society to take the matter up and present some definite plan to the Legislature. This Committee was composed of Wm. H. Van Epps, Prof. J. B. Turner, A. B. McConnell, B. G. Roots, and John P. Reynolds. They drew up a bill as an expression of the views of the farmers, and presented it to the Legislature in 1865, and again in 1867.

State meeting of all those interested in the organization of the proposed Industrial University held at Bloomington. Meeting recommended that the state build only one university.

Sept. 21—Notice was published of an informal election to be held in Champaign county on Oct. 10, by order of the board of Supervisors. The voters were to decide whether or not the county should appropriate $100,000.00 worth of Champaign county bonds "to secure the location of the Illinois Industrial University in this county."

Oct. 5—Proposition of Champaign and Urbana was to purchase the building then standing, called "The Urbana and Champaign Institute Building," with the eight acres on which it stood, at a cost of $30,000.00, then use the other $70,000.00 to buy more land and secure the location of the University over the other contestants—Bloomington, Jacksonville, and other towns had made offers. The Champaign papers said that they could thus give this building, 1,000 acres for a farm, 100 acres for a "garden-patch" and still have $40,000.00 left.

The building was erected in 1861, supposedly at a cost of $175,000.00, and was said to be "one of the largest and most substantial buildings in the State, second only to the Normal University." It stood at the north end of what is now Illinois Field, facing University Avenue. The Main part of the structure was one hundred twenty-five feet front, forty feet in depth, and five stories high. From the center projected a wing forty-four by seventy feet, four stories high. It contained ninety dormitories, each ten by fifteen, "suitable rooms for principals, professors, etc." and "accommodations for 800 students."

Oct. 12—Returns of the election on the question of the bond issue show the vote to have been: For, 1,601; against, 1,035—majority for, 566.

"Urbana and Champaign were unanimously in favor of the measure. A considerable opposition was manifested in some of the country towns, however." This opposition was due to the fact that the smaller towns regarded the whole thing as a scheme on the part of Urbana and Champaign to make the entire county pay for a school which would benefit these two communities only.

Jan. 10—Mr. Tincher (Senator from the Seventh District) introduced into the Senate a bill for "an act to provide for the organization, endowment, and maintenance of the Illinois Industrial University." This bill provided, among other things, that the Institution should be located at Champaign. At the same date Senator Fuller (Twenty-third district) introduced a bill similar to Mr. Tincher's except that it provided for the location of the University by a commission to be appointed by the Governor. These two bills were read twice and ordered printed. Jan. 11—Both bills in the House were introduced, the Champaign bill being offered by Mr. Griggs from that district. The Senate at this time voted that the entire grant should be applied to one institution. Jan. 25—The Governor approved a bill giving any county, city, township, or incorporated town authority to levy taxes or voluntary subscriptions for the purpose of securing the location of the University.

Feb. 1—Mr. Tincher moved to amend the Fuller Bill by striking out the section providing for a committee to locate the college. This amendment was carried by a vote of fifteen to nine. Feb. 22—House Bill amended by adding to the offer contained (the Institute property) therein (as requirements for the location) 810 acres of land, $50,000.00 worth of freight (appropriated by the Illinois Central), $100,000.00 in Champaign County Bonds, and $2,000.00 in fruit, shade, and ornamental trees and shrubbery from Dunlap's nursery, making a total of $450,000.00 estimated valuation of property. This bill as amended passed the House on the same day. Its provisions were that the institution should be located in Urbana. The trustees were to be appointed by the Governor, with approval of the Senate, five from each grand judicial division, and one from each congressional district. They were to serve for six years, without salary, the first appointment to draw lots, one-third to serve two, one-third four, and one-third six years. The trustees were to elect a Regent to serve two years, a Treasurer, and a Recording Secretary, and were to provide buildings, teachers, etc. Students were to be at least fifteen years old. Each county was entitled to a scholarship for descendants of soldiers and seamen. No degrees were to be conferred on graduates. The Regent, with the Governor, the Superintendent of Public Instruction, and the President of the State Agricultural Society were to be ex officio members of the Board. The instructors were "to teach in the most thorough manner such branches of learning as are related to Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts and Military Tactics, without excluding other scientific and classical studies." The college year was to extend through six autumn and winter months so that the students could go home for the six spring and summer months or stay at the University and pursue optional studies "provided that no student shall at any time be allowed to remain in or about the University in idleness, or without full mental or industrial occupation." This Act passed the House by a vote of sixty-six to ten, the Senate by eighteen to seven, and was approved Feb. 28, 1867. The immediate result was a huge celebration in Champaign.

Mar. 8—Passage of Supplemental Bill, providing that on the failure of the county authorities to comply with the requirements of the Act by June 1, the trustees were to locate the University at some other town. Trustees were appointed by Governor Oglesby as follows:
